

SOMEWHERE THERE'S MUSIC: Townes Van Zandt, a Fort Worth product who says all he remembers about his boyhood here is that "I ran away from home a lot," has a new LP out on the Poppy label. Van Zandt has a pleasant sounding, Country Joe McDonald type of voice which works well with the gospel-oriented things he writes for himself (and for Johnny Cash and Buffy Sainte-Marie.) It's likely that he comes across even better in person. You can check that out at Dallas' Rubaiyat Club, where Van Zandt opens a five-night stand this evening.
