There's not much Van Zandt hasn't tried

By THOMAS GOLDSMITH

Call him the Godfather of Folk. Researchers suggest. There's Van Zandt has all the qualifications for folk-music greatness: a collection of beautifully written songs, admiration from people high and low, and a voice that won't end about the rambling "ing of life."

You, a successful poet for Emory Harris and Lee Williams. "There's not much I haven't tried." Van Zandt sings in one of the songs from My Window, his new LP. And the title led by him and others about the high and low of his meandering years here in Nashville. It's true that Van Zandt "did" once, in a critical sense.

"I have twice," he corrected, then in an official answer voice: "That young man does. I didn't hear that, and I heard about it." And there was the period during which Van Zandt so frequently encountered Austin, Texas, city police that they took to calling him by his first name.

"They'd say, 'Tennessee, do you need the cuffs tonight?'" said, "I'm ... yeah." But Van Zandt's songs convey the depth, dignity and will to live he's not depicted through all his lyrics and the lyrics.

Secretaries Week Toast

The encounter with Dylan and his "revenge" comes on an Austin street just before Van Zandt moved back to Nashville. "The way in Austin to play and I had to be sure I was trying to do it with me," Van Zandt recalled. The two songs were "Friday night when friends look Van Zandt to a record about Dylan but get it to him." "I've been listening to your stuff for a long time," Van Zandt said. "I've been listening to your stuff for a long time."
