Nashville artists sing for Texas folk festival

Nashville friends of the Texas folk scene will perform Thursday at a concert to help the Kerrville Folk Festival recover from the financial blow of a rained-soaked 1987 season.

The outdoor festival, held in the Hill Country near Austin, Texas, has featured a profusion of Lone Star State and national folk and songwriting talents during its 15 years of existence. The event, referred to by BMI's Roger Sovine as "the most important songwriting event in America today," was hit with 13 inches of rain during two weeks last year, causing low attendance and $60,000 in unpaid bills. The Music City effort to help the festival get back on its feet is set for 8 p.m. Thursday at the newly re-opened Music Row Showcase club. Nashville artists who are booked for the show include Thom Schuyler, Steve Young, Townes Van Zandt, Kieran Kane, Fred Koller, Pat Alger, Jim Rooney, B.W. Stevenson and Buddy Mondlock.

In addition, a group of Texas artists including songwriters Butch Hancock and Shake Russell and mandolinist Paul Glasse are coming in for the show. Admission is $10 at the door. ■
